1 64. The electrical pulses generated by the APDs on the Fuji receive PCBs are passed to
 2 control logic, where they are used to calculate the distance between the Fuji device and a detected
 3 object. Id.

7 1. Claim 1

8 (a) *An apparatus, comprising:

9 66. Fuji is an apparatus. Specifically, Fuji is a 64-channel LiDAR device designed to be 10 mounted on a vehicle and rotate 360 degrees. UBER00017934; UBER00072215-16; Haslim Decl.
 11 ¶ 7. Fuji includes six transmit printed circuit boards, each of which includes ten or eleven laser
 12 diodes and firing circuits to discharge current through the laser diodes causing them to emit a pulse
 13 of light. WAYMO-UBER00000635; UBER00075463-74.

14 (b) *a voltage source;

15 67. Fuji includes a voltage source. Specifically, Fuji includes an approximately 50-V
 16 power supply. See e.g. Linoval Dep. 177:17-178:17, 180:22-25.² A representation of this supply is 17 labeled V2 in the image below taken from Defendants’ SPICE model of the Fuji firing circuit:

23

24 ² UBER00017934 indicates that the primary system power supply is 24V. The Fuji schematics
 25 and Uber’s SPICE models indicate that an approximately 50V power supply is available for the 26 laser-firing circuits. While I note the discrepancy, it is not relevant to my opinions whether this 50V
 27 supply is derived from the 24V supply or separate, given that there is sufficient evidence that it 28 exists.
